THE SOUTH'S OPPORTUNITY

It would seem that if the people of Florida knew their business they would now be showing in interestingly written and properly displayed advertisements how the average northern family can make money by moving into a country for the winter where the price of coal does not make any difference.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Respectfully referred to the people of Ocala.

ACCIDENT OR INTENT

Sam Hannah's Friends Believe the Former Caused His Death, and the Circumstances Bear Out Their Belief

Grave doubt was thrown yesterday on the theory that Sam Hannah's death at Ocala was self-inflicted by a statement made by a close friend of the deceased, who is a well known and popular hotel man of this city.

"Sam Hannah commit suicide?" said this hotel man. "The idea is preposterous. He had just entered upon a successful and promising business. Young, resourceful, energetic, with boundless possibilities, with the love of a charming wife and a bright little child to bind him to earth, he was the last man to have shuffled off this mortal coil and to have said goodbye to life through the dark shadow of suicide."

A Peculiar Habit

"Knowing Sam like I do—a knowledge gained by years of the closest association—I can readily describe the exact manner of his sad death. He had a habit, when his reason was temporarily shaken by over-indulgence in his cups, of seeking some unoccupied room in the hotel with which he happened to be associated, and, as he expressed it, losing himself. I have known him to do this times without number. Usually, it was the most remote and sequestered apartment of the house; and he seldom looked to see if the windows were closed or the gas in safe condition."

"Sam Hannah had one of these peculiar fits upon him in the Montezuma at Ocala, and doubtless found his way to this unoccupied room, closing the door and throwing himself upon the bed, without regard to the circumstances. I happen to know that the gas jets in the Montezuma are of a crude and primitive nature and that it was natural that this particular one should have been open."

"Sam Hannah died while he slept, a victim, not of his own hand and design, but of the over-indulgence which had fastened itself upon him as a habit. No man who knows him well would for a moment believe that he would deliberately seek death."—Sunday's Tampa Tribune.

The above is believed in Ocala, by most people who knew anything of the circumstances, to be very nearly true; particularly so in the light of events and clearer reasoning since the tragic occurrence. Only, Mr. Hannah was not intoxicated at the time of his death.

Mr. Hannah had a weak heart and poor circulation. He was a good deal weakened by a recent illness. He was taking Antikamnia on the day before his death. In his condition a very little gas would cause death. The room he went to was 8 by 12 feet. There were two windows; one had been pulled down all day and the other it is thought he pulled down to keep out the rain. The transom over the door had not been touched—it was nearly wide open, just as it always stood. The mosquito net frame over the bed might have been the cause of the gas being partly turned on, or it might have been done in a dozen different ways, as the gas burner was a very poor affair and easily opened, or left partially open. Again, and most important, when Mr. Yonce entered the room, and he was the first person to do so, there was not enough gas in the room, small as it was, to make breathing perceptibly difficult—in fact, he and the others all say they hardly noticed the gas. Most of it had gone through the transom in the night and out into the big hall, where it was noticed through the night, but nothing was thought of it. True, the door was thumb-latched, but that was a custom of Mr. Hannah's when he was seeking quiet. The expression on the face of the dead man was a perfectly natural and peaceful one, and looked like the repose of a natural and sweet sleep, showing not the slightest indication of a death by suffocation, and the position of the body was a restful and natural one.

A NOVEL RELIGIOUS RITE

Tom Faircloth, One of the Levy County Murderers, Will Be Baptized in His Coffin

WILL HANG NEXT FRIDAY

Bronson, Fla., Sept. 27.—The execution of Thomas G. Faircloth and Theodore Smith, convicted murderers of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis, of this county, and sentenced to be hanged by Judge Bullock, of Ocala, will, in all probability, take place next Friday between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock in the morning. The hanging will be public, and an immense crowd will be present. Those who will be in the inclosure will be Sheriff H. S. Sutton, County Clerk A. P. Hardee, four deputy sheriffs and twelve citizens, whom the sheriff may select, and the physicians.

The double scaffold is now completed, the coffins have been made, and the only delay is the death warrant, which Governor Jennings will likely forward immediately. A Baptist minister is expected from Gainesville, who will baptize Faircloth in that faith.
